Ranking Factors

1. Specific training and significant experience in the disciplines of real property assessment concepts, principles and practices and tax laws including property validation and classification. (Experience in one or more of these areas is strongly preferred).

In the field of Property Tax and Property Tax Administration, I have always made it a priority of continuing education for my staff and for myself. I attended Rutgers University early in my career, in which I completed such courses as: Real Property I, II, III, Standards of Professional Practice and Ethics, Property Tax Administration I, II, Income, Cost and Market Approach's to Value and Mass Appraisal concepts. I have worked in an environment very similar to Washington, D.C. the majority of my career in the property tax field. As Essex County Tax Administrator in Newark, New Jersey, I supervised twenty two municipal tax assessors and their staffs; making sure municipal tax assessors were valuing all properties (275,000) in Essex County by IAAO standards, practices, concepts and state tax laws in the valuation of all classifications of properties.

My other responsibilities included the recording and classification of all deed transactions which occurred in the County along with equalization of all county values, as well as the certification and calculation of twenty two different tax rates for each municipality's tax list on an annual basis.

In my position with the Virginia Department of Taxation as a Property Tax Consultant in Richmond, Virginia, one of my responsibilities was to review and write narrative appraisals for state purposes. I critiqued outside fee appraisers narrative appraisals for proper concepts, principles and practices according to IAAO standards in accordance with how they arrived at their value for the subject property. In doing so, I would in turn do my own research and inspection of the subject property and write my own narrative appraisal according to IAAO and Standards of Professional Practice and Ethics to determine an alternative value for state purposes. I held training seminars on the three approaches to value, mass appraising, future and current trends in the market place for local Board of Equalization's and local tax assessors around the Commonwealth of Virginia.

As Fulton County 's Assistant Chief Appraiser in Atlanta, Georgia, I had many responsibilities on a daily, weekly and monthly basis. I was charged with running the day-to-day operations of the entire tax assessor's department, which consisted of one hundred and eighty full-time employees, located in four different offices throughout Fulton County.

I was responsible for every residential, commercial and exempt values sent out to taxpayers each year. I met with my senior staff of appraisers, GIS and clerical on a weekly basis. These meetings consisted of weekly reports of statistical data which I analyzed to determine where in the county we needed to improve our uniformity of assessments to ensure compliance to IAAO standards, concepts and practices in the valuation of 338,000 properties on an annual basis.

During my tenure in Fulton County, I completed over ten continuing education courses with Georgia Department of Revenue and have approved over three hundred and fifty continue education courses and seminars for my staff. These courses included management of assessor's office, exempt properties, personal property, certification of assessors, ad valorem edicts and trends, income, market and cost approach. Often times I attended state legislative meetings semi-annually at the state Capital to keep abreast of changes in state tax laws proposed by state elected officials. Over the course of my entire Real Property Assessment career I have attended and completed over one hundred courses in real property concepts, principles, concepts and state tax laws, which has given me the ability to work and succeed at every level of government (city, county and state) in this field in three different states.

2. Ability to use sound judgment and ingenuity interpreting information and the ability to apply information to unique and highly complex properties in addition to the development of standardized appraisal/assessment procedures and practices.

I have demonstrated both sound judgment and ingenuity in the implementation of a new CAMA system that did not have the capability of accomplishing what Fulton County required in the Tax Assessors office. Being extremely knowledgeable of what the CAMA system lacked in relation to what was absent in the inconsistency of the values in different neighborhoods because of the use of an outdated CAMA system.

Additionally, I demonstrated such characteristics in 2007, when I oversaw the Commercial revaluation in Fulton County while we were still training on the new CAMA system. I met with the outside Revaluation firm weekly and reviewed land, improvement schedules and sales data to make sure new commercial values were in line with current market conditions. Many of Fulton County's high valued commercial properties were located in the mid-town and downtown areas of the city of Atlanta. By overseeing this commercial revaluation effort, I made sure that the revaluation firm was following IAAO Standards of Appraisal and Assessment procedures. I ensured all three approaches to value and not just one or two were used to obtain value. This practice ensured a more uniformed value amongst similar properties. I also researched and analyzed the ratio studies, in particular the Coefficient of Deviation (COD) and Price related differential (PRD) which will demonstrates uniformity and bias respectfully.

As an ongoing practice, I gathered third party information from respected real estate publications (Co-star, etc.) which provides you with current data and information of today's current market.

3. Knowledge of computer operation involving assessment functions. Ability to effectively utilize a computer-assisted mass appraisal (CAMA) system and the ability to utilize various software applications such as Microsoft Word, Excel, GIS, Landata and Integrated Tax Systems.

I was responsible for implementing a new $4 million dollar web based CAMA system called IAS WORLD (Integrated Assessment System) from CLT (Cole Layer Trumble Company) in 2006 when I arrived as Assistant Chief Appraiser in Fulton County, Georgia. Over a year and half period, I set training schedules, meetings, and developed policies and procedures to familiarize and acclimate the staff on the new system in a timely and efficient manner. This new system needed modification and security upgrades, which was not included in the original package. The CAMA system was chosen and laid dormant for two years prior to my arrival in Fulton County. At this time, I was charged with implementing, training staff and utilizing all relevant functions of the system.

In addition, I took all of the new CAMA training myself so I would become the subject-matter expert in the event my knowledge was required to assist staff members. The CAMA system was based on the cost approach to value like most CAMA system are designed, but it also had an income approach modification I choose to help the commercial appraisers with valuing income producing properties as well as assist in the defense of commercial tax appeals. Presently, in Rockdale County, Georgia I am using another web-based cost approach CAMA system (WINGAP). This system is used by the majority of Counties in Georgia.

My experience in using Microsoft Word and Excel is vast and extensive. I have used Microsoft word for over twelve years in composing correspondence to most. I have used Excel to produce both simple and complex worksheets with statistical data and formulas as required. I rely on GIS (Geographic information systems) my entire career to locate, map and survey properties new and old. A good up to date GIS system is essential to a productive Tax Assessors department.
